

Chris Bullard

PRME Student, Fordham University

Chris Bullard is currently a MBA student at Fordham University's Gabelli School of Business. Prior to pursuing his MBA, Chris worked for 6 years in the clean energy industry. As the first employee at an energy services company in Los Angeles he helped grow the enterprise to over 100 employees by providing energy efficiency and solar solutions to commercial properties. Chris also led his own venture focused on the recycling of old obsolete solar thermal systems in the California region. Subsequently in New York City Chris was a consultant with Willdan, an energy efficiency consulting firm consulting utilities such as Con Edison as well as Fortune 500 companies on implementing various energy efficiency programs and strategies.

At Fordham Chris is utilizing finance to bring energy access and other critical service to Base of Pyramid communities around the globe. He leads an investment practicum in partnership with the UN's Global Alliance for Clean Cookstoves focused on investing in clean cookstove companies in developing countries, and is co-president of the school's Net Impact chapter. Chris is currently a Portfolio Summer Associate at Acumen, which invests in small-medium sized enterprises with business models geared toward global poverty.
